John McEntee is the head of PPO. Been with potus from the start of 2016 campaign. At his side almost all the time. Was with him this morning asking about Randy.

I think it's about the path to winning, with our campaign's legal efforts only one front of many that need to be pursued to achieve an accountable and just result for the people (in the face of an array of corrupt forces opposing us).

>>> Ok - a few things on Randy that I think are relevant to his counsel to President. First, Randy is totally loyal to the President. He is not looking for his next job. He's got plenty of money and is looking to retire. He has no polite society he is keen to return to intact that might affect his counsel. He grew up dirt poor in rural Georgia and is about as populist as they come. No need to worry that his counsel could down the road become infected with his own personal calculation. Second, he's an unusual attorney in that he thinks well outside the legal box. I don't know if you are aware that I too am an attorney by background. I haven't practiced for 20 years but I am very familiar with the typical legal mind. The normal legal mind is bound to options contained within the legal sphere. Not Randy. He understands we are in a much larger fight in which legal actions are only one subset. That's perhaps most important. He has a multi front 360 field of vision for waging this war.

>>> For example, Whoever the lead lawyer advising the president right now MIGHT be bound to be advising him what is possible with legal recounts in the various states and how that affects getting to 270. If they are bound to that standard, public language is also bounded by those legal standards. It becomes only a legal fight, not a political one. Randy will be advising the president that the currently contested election can be explained and prosecuted in much larger context and across fronts.

>>> I think I mentioned but keep in mind that Randy was Newt's political lawyer during his speakership. He helped Newt weather the Dem onslaught against newt on 88 bullshit ethics charges that threatened to drive him from office. He also was Speaker Hastert's political lawyer during his entire speakership, including through the 2000 Florida recount and gaming out how George W Bush would win the presidency if the election were decided by the House. In short, Randy is a wartime consigliere who thinks the election is being stolen from the President. Also, he knows the situation in Georgia very very well. He knows how they pad the vote totals there.
